

EDUSummit2019 has begun. Led by our own Margaret Cox, King's College, and Thérèse Laferrière, Université Laval, QC, Canada, the conference seeks to engage educational leaders across the world. The difference, here, is that the group includes political leaders who are in a position to initiate change. The conference was opened, for example, by the Canadian Deputy Minister of Education.

World Ecitizens, a child of MirandaNet, has been asked tasked with two activities at the conference, and you can help!

- To disseminate ideas within the educational community, through blogs and web sites like this one
- To open discussion with other groups beyond the educational bubble, through Twitter, and Facebook

Please help!

Information of interest to teachers will be posted here over the next few days.

The Blogging Team for the conference, from the left: Marie-France Boulay, Audrey Raynault (from Canada) and Lawrence Williams (WE)

Tweet responses and suggestions with

#EDUsummit2019

If you have links with non-educational groups in areas such as creativity, Artificial Intelligence, machine learning, policy-making or knowledge building, please help us to spread the word!

See: <https://edusummit2019.fse.ulaval.ca/pages/thematic-working-groups>